INTRODUCTION

This report is a quarterly update of trends in recorded criminal incidents in New South Wales.The report shows trends in 17 major crime categories. The offences reported are those for which the number of recorded incidents is a reliable indicator of the actual incidence of the offence. Offences where the number of recorded incidents reflects the level of policing are not included in this report. Trends are reported for the whole of New South Wales, the 12 NSW Statistical Divisions and the 14 Sydney Statistical Subdivisions.

Trends are calculated by the application of a statistical test for trend[1] to the monthly numbers of recorded criminal incidents over the last eight quarters (24 months) for each offence category except for murder*.

For offences where a statistically significant trend was found, the extent of the trend is indicated by the percentage change in the total number of recorded incidents (for murder, recorded victims) between the last 12-month period and the preceding 12-month period; and between the last 12-month period and the 12-month period 48 months earlier.

Note that the time lag between the reporting of criminal incidents to police and the verification of these incidents on COPS means that some upward revision of data cannot be avoided, particularly for the latest month of the report period.

1. The trend test used was Kendall's rank-order correlation test (see, for example, Conover, W.J. 1980, Practical Non-Parametric Statistics, 2nd ed, John Wiley and Sons, pp 256-260). A two-tailed test with a 0.05 significance level cut off (α=0.05) was used to determine whether there had been an increasing or decreasing trend in the number of recorded criminal incidents over the most recent twenty-four month period covered in the report. Some month-to-month variation in the number of recorded criminal incidents could be due in part to seasonal factors. The test for trend is not sensitive to seasonal variation; it is sensitive only to a generally increasing or generally decreasing trend over the time period examined.

* For murder, the trend test is applied to the monthly number of recorded victims rather than criminal incidents.

* For murder, the trend test is applied to the monthly number of recorded victims rather than criminal incidents.
^ Shows the results of a statistical test for a significant upward or downward trend in the monthly number of criminal incidents recorded over 24 months. Where the trend is significant the percentage change in the number of incidents between the last 12-month period and the preceding 12-month period is shown. 'STABLE' indicates there was no significant upward or downward trend whereas 'N.A.' indicates that the number of incidents recorded was too small for a reliable trend test to be performed.

^ This table shows the results of a statistical test for significant upward (highlighted in red) or downward (highlighted in yellow) trends in the number of recorded criminal incidents over a 24-month period. The trend test used is Kendall's rank-order correlation test. Where the trend is significant (p<0.05), the percentage change between the last 12-month period and the preceding 12-month period is shown. A trend test was not performed if there were fewer than 20 incidents in either of the two years for the period in question; the result ' . ' indicates that a trend test was not performed. A non-significant test result is denoted by 'ns'.

* The trend test for Sydney and NSW on the offence of murder is for the number of victims, not incidents.

^ Ratios are a comparison of NSW SD rates per 100,000 population to the NSW rate per 100,000 population. A ratio of one indicates parity with the state rate. Ratios indicating double the NSW rate (or more) are highlighted in red, whilst ratios indicating half the state rate (or less) are highlighted in yellow.

^^ For the rate calculations, population data were obtained from the Australian Bureau of Statistics publication: Regional Population Growth Australia 2006-07 Cat. No. 3218 (for 2006 and 2007 population estimates). As no population estimates were available for 2008 when this report was published, rates for 2008 were calculated using 2007 population estimates.

^ This table shows the results of a statistical test for significant upward (highlighted in red) or downward (highlighted in yellow) trends in the number of recorded criminal incidents over a 24-month period. The trend test used is Kendall's rank-order correlation test. Where the trend is significant (p<0.05), the percentage change between the last 12-month period and the preceding 12-month period is shown. A trend test was not performed if there were fewer than 20 incidents in either of the two years for the period in question; the result ' . ' indicates that a trend test was not performed. A non-significant test result is denoted by 'ns'.

^ Ratios are a comparison of SSD rates per 100,000 population to the NSW rate per 100,000 population. A ratio of one indicates parity with the state rate. Ratios indicating double the NSW rate (or more) are highligted in red, whilst ratios indicating half the state rate (or less) are highlighted in yellow.

^^ For the rate calculations, population data were obtained from the Australian Bureau of Statistics publication: Regional Population Growth Australia 2006-07, Cat. No. 3218.0 (for 2006 and 2007 population estimates). As no population estimates were available for 2008 when this report was published, rates for 2008 were calculated using 2007 population estimates.

* The rate calculations on the offence of murder is for the number of victims, not incidents.

* There were no LGAs with 20 murder victims in both the two 12-month periods, hence no trend tests were reported. The trend test for NSW on the offence of murder is for the number of victims, not incidents.

A trend test was not performed if there were fewer than 20 incidents in either of the two years for the period in question; the result ' . ' indicates that a trend test was not performed. A non-significant test result is denoted by 'ns'.

^ Ratios are a comparison of NSW LGA rates per 100,000 population to the NSW rate per 100,000 population. A ratio of one indicates parity with the state rate. Ratios indicating double the NSW rate (or more) are highlighted in red, whilst ratios indicating half the state rate (or less) are highlighted in yellow.

Sydney LGA can be considered a special case since the population used to calculate the rate is much lower than the population using the area for work and entertainment and this will be reflected in higher incident rates.

^^ For rate calculations, refer to Explanatory Notes p. 6 regarding population data used. A result of ' . ' indicates either that there were no relevant offences recorded in the LGA, or that the population is less than 3,000 people and no rate was calculated.
